Copenhagen, July 25.

THE 42 Gallies with which the Czar came hither, lye all within our Harbour. Of the 8000 Men they brought, half are already landed, and are encamped without the City; among them are several Calmucks with their Horses: The rest are to go to the same Camp as fast as they land. The two Generals Czeremetoff and Bauer are expected here, and each of them is to bring with him 8000 Men: The Artillery brought by the forementioned Gallies, is landed, and placed before the Russian Camp. His Cæsars Majesty is often on the Water in a Shallop, going from one Vessel to another, and giving Directions for the landing of his Troops. Commandore Tordenschild is gone in a Frigate to Juland, to hasten the Departure of the Transports which are to come hither; and thence he is to sail to Norway, with Orders to Vice-Admiral Gabel to return hither with his Squadron; after which, he the said Commandore Tordenschild is to Cruise off Gottembourg with a Man of War and a Frigate. On the 23^d at Night the Czar's Confort arrived, having all the Burgesses as well as the Garrison flood drawn in in Arms on each Side of the Streets, which she passed, and the Cannon on the Ramparts were fired. The Czar and the King of Denmark went out of the Town to meet her, and conducted her to her Lodgings, where they supped with her that Night. Yesterday the Czar was to see the Collection of Rarities and Curiosities kept in one of the Rooms of the Castle; and to Day their Cæsars and Danish Majesties took the Exercise of riding on managed Horses. We expect very suddenly our Troops from Juland and Holstein, and four Camps are mark'd out for the Forces appointed for the Descent. The English Squadron continues in the Sound, nor is it yet known when it will proceed. M. Grave, Commandore of the Dutch Squadron, was inclin'd to have proceeded on his Voyage, but upon consulting with Admiral Norris, has thought it more adviseable to stay till they can go together.

Hambourg, July 26. 'Tis advis'd from Lubeck, that all Diligence is used in getting together and making ready the Shipping appointed to transport the Russian Troops to Seeland. That Town has undertaken to find Transports for 3000 Men of those Troops; the rest are to embark in other Vessels. Commandore Tordenschild, who brought to Copenhagen the Confirmation of the Repulse of the Swedes at Fredrickshall, as well as of the taking of the Swedish Flotilla, is said to relate likewise, That after that Repulse the Swedes burnt their Bridge on the Swinland, and abandoned Norway. This last News seems to be confirmed by late News from Ystad, of that same date, which advise, That the King of Sweden, at that Time, desir'd to quit Norway, in order to rejoin his Army in Germany; but that before he could, he was oblig'd to make one more attempt on the Town of Friedrickshall, and sent Orders for keeping ready more than 6000 Men in the Neighbourhood of Stockholm, judging that Number sufficient to make Head against the Russians on the Side of Finland. But that all the Regiments should march with them to Schonen; the better to enable him to oppose the Defects threaten'd by the Enemies, for which he was making extraordinary Preparations. His Swedish Majesty having made a Visit to the King of Prussia at Berlin Castle as usual, was much concern'd at his broke out again, which would deprive him of the good Service that might otherwise be justly expected from that Prince this Campaign, which seems to be of the last Consequence to Sweden. Great Part of the Swedish Cavalry being ruin'd by the Expedition into Norway, Horses are sent for from all Parts of the Kingdom of Sweden to supply the Number wanted. Count Van der Nath was gone from Stockholm to wait on his Swedish Majesty, in order to procure more ample Powers, having not been able hitherto to act in the Management of the Finances with all the Success that was expected, because of the strenuous Opposition which he has met with from the chief Men of the Kingdom. M. Cronhielm, who is nominated Plenipotentiary to the Congress for Peace, had received Orders to defer his departure; which shews that the King of Sweden is resolved to try the Fortune of this Campaign, before he enters into a Negotiation with his Enemies. They write from Petersbourg, that the Gallies which went from thence for Finland, were arrived there, and had landed the Troops they carried under the Command of Major General du Pré.

from the Dutch Lottery Office.

At North's Coffee-house in King-street (kept by Matthew Weft, Goldsmith, at the 7 Stars in Clare-market) gives Notice, That the Dutch Lottery begins Drawing the 1st of August next our Office: Likewise disposeth of Shares as formerly. And those that have Prizes on his Shares in the Dutch Lottery, may have them exchanged for Shares in the Dutch Lottery, or have Money for them, at his Office, or at his Office elsewhere, where Register-Books and Tables are kept for the Drawing of the same. The said Matthew Weft sells whole Tickets in the Dutch Lottery, and buys Prizes in the Hamburg. Those that will be concerned are desired to be speedy, for in the last Dutch Lottery at the Drawing could not have Tickets for any Money, and this Lottery is of much greater Advantage to the Adventurer than the former, the lowest Prize being 100 Guilders.
